

HP Risk Management welcomes two new members to the team; Ela Stapley joins us as our Digital Security Expert and Tom Bacon is our new Head of Strategy.

Ela is a former freelance journalist with extensive experience working in Central America on issues concerning conflict, environmental protection and society. When in the region, Ela co-founded an organisation dedicated to helping journalists improve their technical capability and manage their online footprint. She joins HP at a time of growing demand in the media for Digital Security consultancy and training, and is already busy supporting several HP clients to better understand their digital vulnerabilities.

Tom has considerable risk management experience, having run two risk analysis teams over the past eight years. He has helped several media organisations to strengthen their risk assessment processes and understand the changing threat to journalists and the freedom of press worldwide.

Director David Holley has said of the new team members, “we are delighted to have Ela and Tom join HP. They each bring unique experience to the company that will enhance the services we can offer our clients. Their skills and expertise will help us grow the business and offer the market a range of relevant new services and advice”.

For more information on the team and HP’s services please visit <https://www.hpriskmanagement.co.uk/> or get in touch via info@hpriskmanagement.com